An unprecedented exploration of the lives, writings, and secret histories of the long-overlooked women of the Beat Generation including:

Joyce Johnson, the critically acclaimed author of Minor Characters and girlfriend of Jack Kerouac, Josephine Miles, the poet and professor who gave Allen Ginsberg his start, LuAnne Henderson, the girl who went "on the road" with Jack and Neal, Diane di Prima, the distinguished poet and archetypal Beatnik, Joan Burroughs, the intellectual playgirl who brought the Beats together, Carolyn Cassady, the artist and author of Off the Road, wife of Neal Cassady and lover of Jack Kerouac, and Ruth Weiss, a Holocaust survivor and Beat jazz innovator.

"Engrossing... brings a refreshing if brutal honesty to setting the record straight."

—San Francisco Chronicle

"Fleshes out the image of the women beyond bangs and black tights. Recognizes their perspectives and contributions at last."

—Los Angeles Times

"The first time a writer has taken the trouble to really think about it, and dig out women who were on the set at the time."

—Lawrence Ferlinghetti, owner of City Lights bookstore, San Francisco, California

"Brilliant and exciting... instrumental in bringing about a revolution."

—Jonah Raskin, author of For the Hell of It: The Life and Times of Abbie Hoffman

"Thorough and well-researched... an unprecedented look at a group of women whose works were largely ignored until now."

—Publishers Weekly

"Long overdue... an excellent colloquium of some of the finest poets in the English language."

—Michael McClure, author of Scratching the Beat Surface
